

We collect no student data. None.

There are no student accounts, no logins, no tracking, no forms, and no data-collection mechanisms anywhere in the program. This is permanent under the Still In Charge name, not a current-phase policy.

What the program is Still In Charge is a free reference program: a student guide, a parent guide, and classroom discussion prompts, distributed through schools. There is no software to install, no platform to manage, and no required training. Students read materials; nothing reads them back.

What we never collect, from anyone

Student identity

No student names, contact information, or identifiers of any kind.

Student activity

No student work, responses, prompts, or usage activity.

Participation records

No classroom, grade-level, or individual participation records.

Family information

No information from parents or families through any program channel.

What we do count, and how

To report program reach to schools and supporters, Fellowship Intelligence logs distribution only: which schools or partners received materials, what was provided, and in what quantity. This describes materials, never students. All reporting is aggregate and de-identified, and no school-specific figures are shared with any third party without that school's prior written approval.

The website

No account is needed to access any program material. The site sets no cookies and collects no personal information from visitors. Any analytics we use are privacy-respecting and aggregate, they count page visits, never people, and build no individual profiles.

Sponsors and funders

The program is funded by corporate sponsors and distribution partners who support student access. By signed contract, they receive no student data (none exists), have no editorial role, and do not appear in or on any material distributed to students.

“A program that teaches students to protect their privacy from AI systems will not collect their data to prove it works. If a metric would require compromising the principles we teach, we don't collect it.”

Still In Charge is a free educational program of Fellowship Intelligence LLC (Nevada). This disclosure reflects program design as of 2026 and is reaffirmed at each annual review. Questions: contact@stillincharge.org · stillincharge.org · © 2026 Fellowship Intelligence LLC.